user is running the app as administrator We are making a Windows desktop app that needs to do some system wide changes. One such requirement is that the app should show different "administrator" views for different users. The user would have to authenticate before the app would show any changes. This is to prevent user from making unwanted changes. How do I detect if the user is running the app as administrator? A: Check the app's manifest and see if it is marked as "requireAdministrator" A: I ended up doing this using the Windows API RegQueryValueEx. It took a bit of setup, but it worked for my purposes. When checking for admin mode, I was also checking if the user was granted access to the desktop: int access = (GetTokenInformation(Token, TokenInformationClass.DesktopAccess, ref token, TokenInformationLength.Substitute, 2d92ce491b
