A dedicated scientist with a unique ability to teach using the internet, he is authoring a new textbook called "Science Made Simple", which aims at finding truth in science using logic to counteract the false notion that science is just a test of whether one idea is better than the other. Join him as he launches his new website and welcomes you to "Science Made Simple" Q: Is it possible to create a runnable JAR in IntelliJ IDEA 13? Normally, when creating a JAR file, you can define the main class in the Run/Debug Configuration settings. But this doesn't work if you create a runnable JAR file, for example using either the JAR file export wizard or the Archive screen (Ctrl+Shift+A). Is it possible to setup the main class in the Run/Debug Configuration settings? A: Try the Run/Debug Configurations: Main class: Create the JAR file Open the directory containing the JAR file and create a new Run/Debug Configuration Under Run/Debug Configurations choose Run/Debug Configuration for Java Application Enter the first argument ("main", in your case) of your main class Create the second argument (args[0], in your case) and give the 'main' argument to it Note: I have marked these arguments as mandatory, which might be important, depending on your environment, if you don't want to make it mandatory. If you want to use more arguments, just add those directly to the "Run/Debug Configuration for Java Application"
