He was a disciple of Saint Nikon of Pskov and is venerated as a martyr of the 12th century. His feast day is 29 June. Notes Category:Russian saints of the Eastern Orthodox Church Category:12th-century Christian saints Category:11th-century Christian saintsThe present invention relates to a control system for an automotive vehicle and more particularly to such a control system which comprises a fuel control circuit for use with a vehicle engine. It is well known that a fuel control circuit, which provides an output control signal having a signal level proportional to a desired engine air/fuel ratio, is used in conjunction with an automotive engine to achieve the optimum engine operating condition. More specifically, such a fuel control circuit is used to control the air/fuel ratio to a value which is higher than that of the stoichiometric air/fuel ratio. It is also known to use the engine speed and the load of the engine as parameters for the engine operation. An attempt has been made to use these parameters, which are effective for obtaining a suitable engine operating condition, as a control factor for the air/fuel ratio. For example, a fuel control circuit for use with an automotive engine has been disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication (Kokai) No. 55-105547, in which the engine speed and the engine load are used as parameters to determine an output control signal. In this system, the engine speed is detected in a steady state, while the engine load is detected by the output of a tachometer generator connected to the engine. Although the output control signal resulting from the use of the engine load can be utilized to control the engine operation in accordance with the maximum allowable engine output, the use of the engine load to control the engine operation is only effective when the engine load is high. For example, when the engine load is relatively low, the output control signal resulting from the use of the engine load is ineffective to provide the optimum engine operating
