Psychiatric disorders have been suggested to be related to endocrine diseases. Previous studies have focused on a possible association between psychiatric disorders and endocrine factors and disregarded the role of dietary intake. The purpose of this study was to determine the relationship between endocrine-related factors and dietary intakes among Iranian adult middle-aged patients with psychiatric disorders. In this case-control study, 130 patients with schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, major depression disorder, and personality disorder were enrolled. The control group consisted of 130 healthy individuals. Patients' demographic information and anthropometric variables were collected, and blood samples were taken for routine analysis. A structured questionnaire was used to assess dietary intake. Data were analyzed using the SPSS 19 software. The mean age of the patients and controls was 39.9 ± 7.9 years. The mean body mass index (BMI) of the patients was 27.0 ± 3.8 kg/m², and for the controls was 25.3 ± 3.5 kg/m². The mean duration of psychiatric disorders was 2.9 ± 2.2 years. There was a significant difference between the mean serum levels of insulin and insulin resistance for all psychiatric disorders groups. We did not find a significant difference between the four psychiatric disorders groups regarding serum levels of thyroid-stimulating hormone, free triiodothyronine, free thyroxine, and cortisol. However, a significant difference was observed for serum leptin level and a significant association was found between the thyroid-stimulating hormone and leptin levels in patients with major depression disorder.
