In an effort to understand the hypoxic-ischemic event in the premature brain, we studied the response to hyperbaric oxygen in developing rat brain. The present study was undertaken to elucidate the mechanisms of oxygen-induced metabolic alterations in the developing brain in vivo. Pregnant rat was exposed to 30% oxygen at 1.3 ATA for 2 h in an animal exposure chamber. The brain of the offspring (13 day-old) was perfused with a physiological solution and the distribution of radioactivity was studied. Brain radioactivity was found to be maximum in the regions of the cortex, subcortical white matter and cerebellum. A rapid initial uptake of radioactivity in the cerebrum, cerebellum and brainstem and a slow subsequent decrease of radioactivity in the cerebrum were
