Flickr/Samuel Windsor Every day, hundreds of adults and children are booked into our state's juvenile detention centers and prisons. This year, nearly 6,000 people, mostly young people, spent time in these facilities for cannabis-related charges. It's a significant increase from the same time last year, when there were just over 3,300 people charged with cannabis-related offenses — about one-third of all drug-related arrests in California. While this growth is certainly concerning, it's not surprising, considering California is the world's largest cannabis market. Perhaps the trend will continue to grow, and more states will join the 33 that already have legalized cannabis. But that doesn't mean it will be easy for cannabis businesses and advocates to grow. And a new challenge has emerged: the number of juveniles being charged for cannabis offenses. In a report on the 2018 cannabis industry and trends, US News & World Report noted: "California's lenient, ever-evolving marijuana laws give adults access to a highly regulated market, but juveniles are being arrested in higher numbers for misdemeanor marijuana crimes." They're arresting juveniles for misdemeanor offenses that adult cannabis users and sellers are exempt from? Yes, and it's really a problem. It's not a good look for a state that's pushing to be the leader in legalizing cannabis. The good news is, at least some law enforcement agencies in California are taking steps to help. US News & World Report reports: "Police agencies around the state have implemented diversion programs for juvenile marijuana offenders. Though the success rates of
