One of the chief complaints among some advocates is that the current state of affairs is leaving them too powerful. That argument seems to be particularly strong in the aftermath of the Cambridge Analytica/Facebook scandal. The thing is, if you argue that Facebook and Google shouldn't be able to do what they're doing, you're implicitly arguing that they should be regulated. For example, I'd argue that if you believe Facebook shouldn't be allowed to use your data to create targeted ads at a level that you didn't expect, then you're arguing that Facebook should be regulated. So even if you argue against regulation of Big Tech, you're effectively arguing for it. This is one of the reasons we're launching GrassFyre. GrassFyre isn't just a website or a video channel. GrassFyre is the culmination of a movement to
