A prospective study was performed to investigate the reliability of our preliminary observations on a one-stage anterior release of stiff fingers. In 42 of 45 patients, both flexion and extension contractures at the metacarpophalangeal (MCP) and proximal interphalangeal (PIP) joints were improved. We found that the age at the time of the release, sex, presence of rheumatoid arthritis, and number of digits affected did not affect the outcome. Most patients who received an early release obtained full motion at the MCP and PIP joints in a mean period of 11 weeks. In one third of the cases, a repeat release was performed at 12 weeks after the initial release. We conclude that early anterior release should be considered in stiff fingers with a flexion and extension contracture and in all patients with one or more digits affected.Q: How to determine if a JS array contains an object with a specific property? My JavaScript object has an array called items which looks like this: [{name: "this", isSelected: true}, {name: "that", isSelected: false}, {name: "the", isSelected: false}] If I then have an input field, with an id of "fieldToCompareTo", and I want to determine if this object with the name "fieldToCompareTo" is in the items array, how would I go about this? I've tried various methods such as items.filter(), but I can't figure out how to check if the name of the object I have matches an item in the items array
