Our newest release has the following changes:☐The most enlightened people have invariably to suffer and suffer much in order to arrive at a knowledge of what is good for them.☐ — Fyodor Dostoevsky Mental Well-being and the Power of Positive Thinking The Positive Mental Attitude (PMA) is the cornerstone of all positive change. In fact, research shows that positive mental attitudes enable people to cope better with stressful situations, to make better decisions, and to generate more energy and enthusiasm for their lives. Research on the effects of positive thinking are especially powerful in the field of education, where new theories and research findings have been developed that show that positive thinking enables people to attain a higher level of performance in schools and other academic environments. The process of transforming negative emotions into positive ones is called Positive Mental Attitude (PMA) training. PMA is particularly useful in the corporate world for improving personal and organizational relationships. PMA is a specific type of cognitive therapy that helps people learn to think more positively about the world and their own lives. The Use of Affirmations to Boost Positive Thinking A basic principle of PMA is to affirm positive beliefs with a behavioral intention. For instance, “I am patient and kind to myself” or “I am worthy of love and respect” or “I am able to solve problems and solve them quickly” are typical positive affirmations. Another important skill of PMA is self-disclosure. As Martin Seligman states, “It is your inner life, not your outer life, that is your real life.” This idea of inner life is known as Self-disclosure. The way we communicate and the thoughts we think about ourselves and others are part of our inner life and its effectiveness must be based on their personal relevance. For example, the PMA of “I am worthy of respect” will be more powerful if you affirm this thought to yourself in a context of speaking or thinking to a person in a way that respects them. It is important to identify and remove the barriers to self-disclosure and to accept that it is possible to be more open about yourself. Why Positive Thinking Works The power of positive thinking is because it serves to change the thinking of the self and of others, thereby changing our 2d92ce491b
