All you need to do is just search on Google for .There is a significant amount of cutting edge research being done in the area of biomedical device coatings, specifically in the use of "living" coatings in biomedical devices. This review will survey the current state of living coatings in the field of implantable medical devices. The authors focus on recent progress in this field including new coating technologies for use in drug delivery devices, living layers on polymer coatings, and in vivo applications of living layers. The background on the use of living layers and the technologies employed for these layers to operate will be reviewed, followed by a summary of the techniques and the variety of materials employed for this purpose. Review of the background and technology used for these layers to operate will be completed. The future of the technology will be predicted and reviewed, along with any potential or likely future issues with this technology that will need to be addressed. Excerpt from the publication: Chrome browser hash location goes dark - arjsn ===== TeMPORaL > _Using a different browser or device isn 't an option for users..._ "Aren't options" usually mean "aren't valid if you didn't spend time reading/deciding about them". I'm pretty sure most users would consider "switch browser" or "restart the device" valid options, no? ~~~ deanclatworthy If they can use something else, then it's not an option. ~~~ TeMPORaL Can I find a better expression of this? Like, an option that doesn't mean being forced to compromise your desires and principles, or use the newest option that's supported by a popular platform, etc. ~~~ pmontra Not really, it's part of the language. You can always choose something different, for example about 10 years ago I was a Linux and a Mac user, then I switched to Linux and Mac
