Rotator E2 3.3.5.4 serial number maker.Q: ASP.Net MVC edit record I have an Asp.Net MVC website. I have a page that lists all the available records, I click on one of the records and I am taken to a form which allows me to edit the record. (this is working) I have now come to the point where I want to be able to edit the record that the user was previously viewing. I.e click the edit link on the page and I am presented with the edit form on the actual record being edited not the record that was just displayed on the page. I think I should be using some URL routing to achieve this, the problem is I'm not exactly sure how to go about this! Ideally I would like to be able to use the standard edit route of the address of an address of a post or something like that. Here is what I have so far: routes.MapRoute("Default", // Route name "{controller}/{action}/{id}", // URL with parameters new { controller = "Home", action = "Index", id = UrlParameter.Optional } // Parameter defaults); How would I use the code above to display the form on the record that was previously displayed? Any help would be greatly appreciated, I have been trying to figure this out on my own for the past couple of days now. Thanks in advance, A: Well if you are passing a param to the form using the URL in the original page then you could change your routes to use a parameter name routes.MapRoute("Default", // Route name "{controller}/{action}/{id
