Sadly, Hillary has not demonstrated that she is up to the task of being president of the United States. I don't see how she is a clear-cut superior over Obama. Well, people who are dark-skinned and/or wear African garb are considered to be Arabs, and in America they're considered to be Muslims. If this woman was born and raised in Iran or Iraq, then there's a good chance that she'd be considered a Muslim, and it's not hard to figure out why that isn't so in America. The question is what would happen if she lost to the Democrats in the next election. I think you may have stumbled onto the source of the problem. I don't think it has to do with being a Muslim woman. I think that all she has to do is to show that she is a socialist of some sort (maybe she is, but I think the Democrats would lose their minds if she was not), and she may get enough votes just for the association with socialism. I don't think she can put it back in a shoe-box for decades. And I think it's not all about Obama, either, but that she's a woman, and there have not been that many women in office in American history, so she has some hurdles to overcome, too, but women don't seem to have as much of a problem with it as Obama. First of all, I'd like to say I never doubted any of the WMD claims Obama made regarding Iraq. I didn't follow up on the claims from the beginning, because I couldn't believe that America would choose to go to war over something like that, and I can't believe that any American government could. I'm not holding my breath that anyone who voted for Bush is now going to vote for Obama, but I do hope that at least the people who did vote for Bush are reasonably unhappy with how he's handled the Iraq War. As to the "misinterpretation" of the Iraqi police captain, I think it was bad enough what the Bush administration lied about, and I think this was just another one of their lies, but anyway, the administration did say that the Iraqi police captain said that he was an al-
