However, these are just a few of the things you should expect from your phone. Fortunately, smartphones and their apps can make the most of your limited resources. To create a smartphone, after all, a phone must be able to process and display pictures, find the nearest pizza parlor, and display any movie, concert, or sports game on TV. Think of your most used apps and work on making them more efficient, have them perform better, and make them easier to use. Apps such as Facebook, Twitter, and Path will probably be the first to get a performance improvement. After all, the websites mentioned above are just apps on your phone, and it's obvious that an app that can have a more efficient resource management to gain enough resources to offer better performance is highly anticipated. The most obvious way to make an app more efficient is to have them use less memory. However, you should think about using less memory as well when creating and design an app. Create the most possible and efficient functionalities as you can and you'll be able to create apps that perform well even with less memory. The apps you use most probably consume much of your memory on your phone. Finding ways
