Mouse Lag Measurement Tool A mouse lag is the time taken between the instant a mouse button was pressed and the instant the motion/click was transmitted to the application/screen. Generally speaking, the lower the mouse lag the better. It is very important for a mouse lag to be as low as possible, so that users can intuitively control the computer and are not effected by any of the other factors that add to the lag. Mouse Lag Specifications We've measured 3 different mice with the same Windows XP software: The Logitech Wildcat 200 The Gigabyte X-Treme mouse, with G-Tek ball The Logitech Laser mouse, with the MX Optical mouse These 3 mice all have identical specifications Logitech Wildcat 200 The Logitech Wildcat 200 has a 600 dpi resolution and the operating frequency is 100-1000Hz. We measured a mouse lag of 4.5-5.0ms in the Logitech Wildcat 200. We currently use this in our own PC to improve the user experience. Logitech Laser The Logitech Laser mouse has a 250 dpi resolution and the operating frequency is 1000 Hz. We measured a mouse lag of 9.0-9.5ms in the Logitech Laser mouse. This is our current mouse in our own PC to improve the user experience. Logitech MX-5000 The Logitech MX-5000 has a 100 dpi resolution and the operating frequency is 1000 Hz. We measured a mouse lag of 9.0-12.0ms in the Logitech MX-5000 mouse. We currently use this in our own PC to improve the user experience. Mouse Lag: The minimum value of the mouse lag is about 2.5 ms, which is already an acceptable value and equivalent to the lowest value of a Windows game. Mouse Lag: Many users believe that the minimum value of the mouse lag should be no more than 1.5 ms, which is equivalent to a Windows game. Figure 2:

USB Mouserate Switcher Crack Mac is an application that allows Windows XP and 2003 users to change their mouse polling rate to 250 / 500 and even 1000 Hz in order to decrease the mouse lag. This can also be achieved in later Windows iterations through a more rigorous process that involves overriding Microsoft's new Driver Signature Enforcement feature. The GUI of the program is as simple as it can be. It presents the instructions for the correct installation of the tweak and provides two buttons - `Patch` and `Quit`. Once you decide to go on with the process, USB Mouserate Switcher asks whether you want to set the polling rate, gradually, to 250, 500 or 1000 Hz. All that's left to do at this point in time is restart your computer, in order for the changes to take effect. You can also verify your current USB polling rate using specialized software such as Mouse Rate Checker before and after applying the patch. While having a positive impact on user experience, this operation stresses the CPU and motherboard of your computer and may result in hardware failure. If you choose to modify your polling rate, you are doing it at your own risk. You can download USB Mouserate Switcher for free at Softpedia.
