Zirconia-based core-shell-structured yolk-shell microspheres with enhanced biocompatibility and dual-mode action for the efficient immobilization of β -galactosidase. This study was aimed to synthesize and characterize ZrO₂-based yolk-shell microspheres (YSMs) and to explore their possibility to be used as an efficient immobilization matrix for β -galactosidase (β -Gal). The designed ZrO₂-based YSMs were fabricated by a modified solvothermal method. The biocompatibility and adsorption performance of the synthesized YSMs were evaluated by cellular experiment, indicating that the YSMs exhibited good cellular adhesion properties and showed a better adsorption performance for β -Gal than the yolk microspheres (YMs) and commercial β -Gal. Subsequently, the obtained YSMs were applied as a matrix for the immobilization of β -Gal. The results indicated that the immobilized β -Gal showed similar catalytic activities with the free enzyme.
