and-forth over the shots fired from the top-right — including a pretty nasty road-to-hospital moment involving the 55-year-old shot in the neck. Finally, after 10 minutes, 69-year-old Tom wasn't feeling good. One of the medics leaned close to the bed, used his fingers to unbutton the Trauma-Gard kit and stick the cannula directly in Tom's vein. A few seconds later, Tom's oxygen levels dropped, his heart rate spiked and he coughed up blood. That's when he flatlined and all hell broke loose. But there was a problem — no paddle. So the medics raced down the hall for the defibrillator. But there was still no way to get the paddles to Tom without coming dangerously close to one of his life-sustaining tubes. So a new plan had to be made. They scooped Tom off the gurney and stood him on the floor, his feet dangling above the urine-soaked tile. The first volunteer from the EMT team plunged the defibrillator into Tom's chest and pulled back like a cheerleader hauling in a touchdown pass. The result was a whirring ball of electricity passing through Tom's chest, back and arms in a flash. The medics grabbed the charging paddles and gave them a quick practice before repeating the feat on the next two patients. An hour later, Tom was eating French toast again, while the other three patients were breathing easy. "It was a pretty rough night," Dr. Elliott said. Lack of oxygen and the high-stress situation made for a very long night for the EMS medics. "For anyone who has ever been involved in critical care medicine, you can understand the importance of hands-on patient care," Dr. Elliott said. "Being in an operating room and being able to effectively provide care is a precious commodity. Being in an ambulance with a patient who needs close monitoring and intervention at any time is even more important." Dr. Stuhmer agrees. He said it's a great feeling, knowing you helped put someone back on the street. "We are the guys who ride the ambulance through the traffic," Dr.

Simple Password Checker Glad to hear that a simple calculator is useful for you. Please learn from my mistakes. Once a password is solved, your company is no longer vulnerable to the theft of consumer identities and information. Note: The checker finds the password, or password hash, for the registered domain. 1. Enter a domain name and click 'Check' to get the password or password hash. 2. Confirmation: Passwords with characters below 26 are truncated. For example, this is a password with the first 6 characters: abc The checker returns: "abc" 3. Confirmation: It doesn't work with passwords longer than 8 characters. For example, this is a password with the first 6 characters: abc The checker returns: "abc" Q: How to run an hdfs file share on local kubernetes I am using kubernetes to deploy a python app to a cluster of machines. The app creates an hdfs file share and I want it to be accessible over the local machine. I am aware that there are a number of ways to do this, but I am having trouble finding an example that works from the kubernetes perspective. My app creates an hdfs file share in its launch script: `bin/my_app --hdfs_dir /var/hdfs/` This is accessible via `localhost: hdfs://localhost:9000/user/foo/` I can mount the local mount point in the pod, but I can't find a way to map the hostpath of the file share to the pod's path. I tried mounting the hostpath in the Pod with no luck: `volumeMounts: - mountPath: /var/hdfs/ name: hdfs` See below for an example:

apiVersion: v1 kind: Pod metadata: labels: app: my-app name: hdfs-pod spec: containers: - image:
k8s.gcr.io/sample-app:1.0 name: hdfs-pod ports: - containerPort: 9000
