It is an historic gold-mining town, which at its peak was the largest in the colony, producing 40,000 ounces of gold per year and exporting large quantities of sand and yellow wattle bark. Of the many caves in the area that were used by the miners, the largest is located in the gully beside the Richmond River. This cave is open to the public and the area around it is known as Benton's Grotto, named after the previous owner of the mines, Henry Benton. Bentonville is on the banks of the Richmond River and includes a local recreation reserve. History Mining at Benton's Grotto near Bendigo started in 1852. It was bought in 1858 by William Cliff, who soon sold the mine to Henry Benton. Benton had a vision of the mine re-discovered, mined and developed. With hard work and self-belief, he fulfilled his vision. Bentonville is one of the oldest towns in Victoria, being first settled in 1838. The first 'white settlement' was a small hut at that time at Bendigo. Henry Benton owned mining leases in the north of the Bendigo area and was a shareholder in mining companies based there. When he acquired a mining lease at what is now the location of the town of Bentonville, he named it after a friend at Bendigo, James Benton. He expanded the mining lease and made several attempts to establish a town there. The first attempt failed, but after the discovery of gold at the Bendigo field, Bentonville was re-established in 1860. At this time he also established the Richmond River Police which operated until 1872. In the gold rush period, Bendigo mining dominated the export trade. In 1860, 400 tonnes of gold were mined and the gold-producing region grew rapidly. This mine exported such a high volume of gold that it created 'the Bendigo boom', which was

Radio frequency identification (RFID) technology is widely used in a variety of applications such as object tracking and inventory management in retail stores. RFID tags are also used in diverse applications such as in toll-free telecommunication, product security, and portable documents, to name a few. A typical RFID tag is a small semiconductor device with a unique serial number embedded in an integrated circuit chip. The RFID tag includes an antenna connected to the chip via an exposed contact pad. The chip includes a transceiver and a memory (which may be volatile or non-volatile). The RFID tags may be passive, semi-passive, or active. The passive tags operate at a fixed frequency of the interrogating RF field. The semi-passive tags are provided with an on-board power source that enables a write cycle to update the tag's memory. Active tags are powered by a battery and have all the functions of a semi-passive tag, with the addition of a radio frequency power amplifier. A typical RFID tag is a single-piece device. No two single-piece RFID tags are "interchangeable" as they are made from completely separate and non-interchangeable integrated circuits, memory chips, and antennas. This characteristic, along with a host of other limitations on the number of functions that an RFID tag can perform, make it impossible to have an RFID tag that can do more than one or two simple actions. For example, a traditional RFID tag can receive and store a serial number, but cannot provide security or perform any other significant functions. To do so requires a two-piece RFID tag, in which a separate security circuit and/or memory circuit is integrated with the antenna. The two-piece RFID tag has its own antenna, which provides a possibility for an attacker to compromise the security and/or memory circuits by blocking the antenna's receiving field in a manner similar to an antenna-blocking attack. Therefore, an RFID tag must be a single-piece device in order to protect its d0c515b9f4

I have a Rails application deployed on Heroku. I need to access a controller with a specific route. For example I have a web site defined like : GitHub app So in the account_controller # GET /home def index #... end Now i need to test a route : Now i go in rails console, and run this : Now i get this : The page you were looking for isn't found. # # If you got this page from another site, copy and paste the URL # into the address bar of your browser. I know that it is a heroku problem because if i run this heroku run rake db:migrate and then heroku run rake console i got no problem. (I run the migrations before the rails console) Do you have some idea? Thanks A: I don't know what you did with heroku run rake db:migrate but I think its running migrations will make your app ready to run. Try running heroku run rake routes in your console to see which routes are available. If you don
