Roblox is a free-to-play virtual world that is populated by players to create their own games. By default, it's a sandbox environment, where players can create whatever they want. However, some players have expressed discontent with this mode, and others have been disappointed with their creations. Since November 2012, content in Roblox has been rated for kids, with varying degrees of ratings depending on what it contains. Roblox, which is trademarked, can be described as a cross between Minecraft and Second Life. In Roblox players explore a world filled with virtual representations of real-world objects, people, animals, and businesses (such as McDonald's, KFC, and Target). Players are free to explore the game and play games created by other players. In the words of the Roblox Corporation, the game offers a virtual world of "endless creativity and imagination." It is one of many website-based game development systems intended as a creative outlet as well as a way to foster creativity in children. Many players spend all or most of their time in the game, while others spend a minimal amount of time there. Roblox Games: Players are assigned a character when they join the game. Characters can be customized with different colors, personalities, avatars, clothing, and hairstyles. Characters are generally created to represent players. Their skin color may be white, black, red, orange, brown, yellow, or green. They may be male or female. They may have different hairstyles and clothing. Some characters' appearances may be customizable. Players may customize their avatars by purchasing cosmetic items or by using Robux. Unlike in other game development systems, players in Roblox may add gaming content that they create themselves. Players can create "blocks" that can be placed within the game. These blocks can be any type of object, such as a person or vehicle. For example, a player can create a car; specify what is inside the car, including the color and style; and then place the car inside Roblox. Some players create other players in the game. This can be done using objects such as animals, vehicles, weapons, tools, or other objects. Players can invite others to their game, and these players can use their avatars to explore the virtual world together. A player can also invite a real-world person into the game, and that person may use the same avatar he or she uses in real life. Players have used their avatars to
